Xerox introduces the second of the Marathon copiers

The new Xerox 1035.

A Marathon that runs uphill and downhill.

Recently, Xerox unveiled a running machine unlike any the world had over seen. The Xerox 1075 Marathon. The first of a new generation of copiers designed to withstand the greatest tests of endurance and stamina. Now the second of this new breed is here. The Xerox 1035.

It's the world's first desktop copier that has four reduction and two enlargement modes. So you can turn an original into just about any size copy you could want. The 1035 will even select the best reduction or enlargement for your purposes, automatically.

But what makes the Xerox 1035

Marathon outrun every competitor in its class are features you'd expect to find only in

For instance, with the help of advanced electronic technology, the Xerox 105 copier is so intelligent, it can actually "think through" difficult copy jobs and then show you how to do them. Just press the "Help" button that's linked to a message display panel, and in plain English the 1035 can walk you through what needs to be done. Advanced electronics also enable the Xerox 1035 to make copies so crisp and clear they're difficult to tell from the crisinal

And features like five contrast settings for colored or problem originals, an optional sorter, job interrupt and two paper trays make it hard to believe that the 1035 is only a desktop copier at a desktop copier price.

But when you see how the Xerox 1035 is as reliable as it is advanced, you'll also see how this Marathon has been designed to run and run and run. Hour offer hour offer hour offer hour.

Winning effort.

Like a lot of people, you started by blasting the cover off a golf ball at a driving range. But you soon discovered that it was less a battle with the ball than with yourself. So now, when you manage an especially good round, you feel great. Because you've won in more ways than one.

You're tasting success and it sure tastes good.

That Esquire is now fifty years of age is not in itself extraordinary. Other magazines have achieved half a century of continuous publication. It is indeed extraordinary, however, that any magazine should reach age fifty with its original vitality and character so unchanged by time. Esquire's focus has of course evolved as life itself has evolved over the decades, making it as relevant to its time today, as ever, the essential magazine for the man of the 1980s. But Esquire's original spirit thrives because its original vision remains intact. What it sought when it came into being half a century ago it seeks today: in a word, quality. Quality in editorial thought and presentation. Quality as an ideal to pursue and to celebrate, wherever it is found in the world inhabited by Esquire and its readers. Quality in individuals. In institutions. In places and experiences and things. Ultimately, there may be nothing more to the fifty-year success of Esquire than this-that quality endures. And so do magazines that keep sight of it.
